

A 7-DAY REFLECTION JOURNAL

From Stuck to Grounded

A journey from overwhelm to steady ground

COREY'S COACHING CORNER

Welcome

If you're holding this journal, something brought you here. Maybe you're navigating a diagnosis that changed everything. Maybe you're in the thick of recovery and wondering if this heaviness will ever lift. Maybe you just feel stuck — not sure how to move forward, but knowing you can't stay where you are.

I want you to know: that's okay. All of it. You don't need to be further along than you are right now.

This journal isn't about positive thinking or pretending the hard stuff isn't hard. It's about honest reflection — giving yourself space to name what's real, notice what's still good, and start building a foundation under your feet again.

Over the next seven days, you'll move through gentle prompts and grounding exercises designed for people navigating exactly what you're navigating. There are no wrong answers. There is no falling behind. There is just you, showing up for yourself — and that matters more than you realize.

You are more than your diagnosis. You are more than your hardest day. And you deserve to feel grounded again.

I'm so glad you're here.

With warmth,
Corey

How to Use This Journal

1

One day at a time

Each day has its own theme, prompts, and exercise. Try to do one day at a time rather than rushing through. The space between days is where the work settles in.

2

There are no wrong answers

Write whatever comes. Messy is fine. Incomplete is fine. A single word is fine. The point isn't perfect prose — it's honest presence.

3

Try the exercises

Each day includes a grounding practice or action exercise. These are designed to get you out of your head and into your body. Even if they feel unfamiliar, give them a try.

4

Come back to the affirmations

At the end of each day, you'll find an affirmation. If one resonates, write it on a sticky note. Put it where you'll see it. Let it do its quiet work.

5

Be gentle with yourself

If a day feels too heavy, pause. Skip ahead. Come back. This journal will wait for you. There is no timeline. There is no grade. There is only your pace.

"Healing is not linear. Some days will feel like breakthroughs and others like setbacks. Both are part of the journey. What matters is that you keep showing up — even imperfectly."

Acknowledging Where You Are

Before you can move forward, you need to honor where you are right now — without judgment, without fixing, without forcing yourself to feel anything other than what's true. Today is about landing here. Just here.

REFLECT

Right now, if I'm being honest with myself, I feel...

The hardest part of where I am today is...

One thing I want to give myself permission to feel (but usually don't) is...

DAY 1 Acknowledging Where You Are

GROUNDING PRACTICE: 5-4-3-2-1

Pause. Name 5 things you can see, 4 you can touch, 3 you can hear, 2 you can smell, and 1 you can taste. This brings you back to the present moment — the only place healing begins.

"I don't have to have it all figured out. Being here is enough."

The Weight You Carry

We all carry things — grief, frustration, fear, exhaustion, the weight of "what used to be."
Today we're naming those things. Not to fix them, but because what we name, we can begin to set down.

REFLECT

The heaviest thing I'm carrying right now is...

Something I lost that I haven't fully grieved is...

If I could say one thing to the people around me about what this is really like, I'd say...

DAY 2 The Weight You Carry

RELEASE EXERCISE: THE LETTER YOU DON'T SEND

Write a short letter to your frustration, grief, or exhaustion — as if it were a person sitting across from you. Tell it what you need it to know. You don't need to send it. You just need to say it.

"My pain is real. Naming it doesn't make me weak — it makes me brave."

Reclaiming Small Moments

When life feels overwhelming, we often miss the small things — a quiet morning, a good conversation, a moment where your body felt okay. Today is about noticing. Healing doesn't always look dramatic. Sometimes it looks like a deep breath that actually lands.

REFLECT

A small moment recently that felt like peace (even for a second) was...

Something I used to enjoy that I'd like to reconnect with is...

One thing that went right today — even something tiny — was...

DAY 3 Reclaiming Small Moments

MINDFUL MOMENT: THE 2-MINUTE PAUSE

Set a timer for 2 minutes. Close your eyes. Breathe in for 4 counts, hold for 4, exhale for 6. When the timer goes off, write down one word that describes how you feel. That's it. No analysis. Just one word.

"I don't need a perfect day. I just need one good moment to build on."

Your Inner Voice

The stories we tell ourselves shape everything — how we see our diagnosis, our recovery, our future. Some of those stories were handed to us by fear, by other people's expectations, or by our worst days. Today we start recognizing which voices are ours and which ones we can let go.

REFLECT

A story I keep telling myself about my situation is...

If my best friend were going through this, I would tell them...

One belief about myself that I'm ready to question is...

REFRAME PRACTICE

Take one negative thought you wrote above. Write it down again. Now, beneath it, write a kinder, truer version. Not toxic positivity — just something more honest and compassionate. Example: "I'll never be who I was" → "I'm becoming someone I haven't met yet, and that's allowed to take time."

"I get to choose which story I carry forward."

Finding Your Anchors

Anchors are the people, places, practices, and things that hold you steady when everything else feels unstable. They're not solutions — they're touchpoints. Today is about identifying yours, so you can reach for them intentionally.

REFLECT

The person who makes me feel most seen and understood is...

A place (real or imagined) where I feel safe and calm is...

A practice or routine that helps me feel more like myself is...

DAY 5 Finding Your Anchors

BUILD YOUR ANCHOR LIST

Create your personal anchor list — write down 3 to 5 things you can turn to when you feel unsteady. Keep this list somewhere visible. When the hard days come (and they will), you won't have to think — you'll just reach for what's already there.

"I am not doing this alone, even when it feels that way."

Honoring What Was & What Is

Grief and growth are not opposites — they live side by side. You can miss who you were and still be proud of who you're becoming. Today we hold both. No rushing. No either/or. Just the full, complicated truth of being human in the middle of something hard.

REFLECT

Something I deeply miss about my life before is...

Something new I've discovered about myself through this experience is...

If I could honor both my grief and my growth in one sentence, it would be...

THE TWO HANDS PRACTICE

Hold your hands out, palms up. In your left hand, place what you've lost — name it silently. In your right hand, place what you've gained or are gaining — name that too. Now bring your hands together. Both are real. Both are yours. Neither cancels the other out.

"I can grieve what was and still build what's next. Both are allowed."

From Stuck to Grounded

You've spent six days doing real, honest work. You've named what's heavy, noticed what's good, questioned old stories, and found your anchors. Today is about bringing it all together — not as a finish line, but as a foundation. You're not "fixed." You're grounded. And grounded is where everything begins.

REFLECT

The biggest thing I've realized about myself this week is...

One thing I want to carry forward from this journal is...

A promise I want to make to myself going forward is...

DAY 7 From Stuck to Grounded

YOUR PERSONAL GROUNDING PRACTICE

Using what you've learned this week, design a 5-minute daily grounding practice. It might include a breathing exercise from Day 3, an anchor from Day 5, and an affirmation from any day that resonated. Write it below. This is yours now — something you can return to whenever the ground feels unsteady.

"I am more than my diagnosis. I am more than my hardest day. I am grounded, and I am growing."

You Did the Work. Now Let's Keep Going.

Completing this journal is a real accomplishment — you showed up for yourself seven days in a row, and that takes courage. But this doesn't have to be where the journey ends.

If you're ready to go deeper — to move from grounded to truly thriving — I'd love to support you. I offer a free, no-pressure consultation where we can talk about where you are, where you want to be, and how coaching can help you get there.

You are more than your diagnosis.

BOOK YOUR FREE SESSION

coreyscoachingcorner.wixsite.com/coachcorey

Instagram: @coreyscoachingcorner

Facebook: Corey's Coaching Corner

You Are More Than Your Diagnosis

coreyscoachingcorn.wixsite.com/coachcorey